

One H.P. Cars For Children

By THOMAS H. WISDOM.

THE children of to-morrow will not play truant or lag on the way to school—they may miss the chance of learning to drive a car.

For, before long, every school will have its own one-h.p. model.

"The education and control of all road-users calls for drastic action," declares the Alness Report, findings of the Select Committee of the House of Lords appointed to solve road chaos. That report is now being kept in the public eye by motor-minded peers and M.P.s who refuse to let it be pigeon-holed.

But it has been left to a new motor manufacturer, formerly a maker of motor lawn-mowers, to produce a miniature car with which to teach the younger generation road sense.

This little car, called the Atco Junior "Safety First" Trainer, is "built like Daddy's" and capable of 10 miles an hour. It need not be registered when used in schools.
